HOPE PRO II SINGLESPEED HUB

For some reason a few years back Hope stopped selling their singlespeed hub, but the good news is that they're now making one again and it's even better than before. Rather than relying on one of those crappy screw-on sprockets with an inbuilt freewheel like the old version did, the new one simply has a shortened version of the Hope Pro II freewheel body that we know and love. To this you can fit pretty much any singlespeed sprocket, and the spacers allow you to fine tune the chainline. As usual you can get the hub in a range of colours and to suit either a 32 or 36 hole rim, but there's also the added choice of a nutted or QR axle.
